Project 2025 Opening Statement

America's Bicentennial, which culminated on July 4, 1976, was a spirited and unifying celebration of our country, its Founding, and its ideals. As we approach our nation's 250th anniversary, which will take place during the next presidency, America is now divided between two opposing forces: woke revolutionaries and those who believe in the ideals of the American revolution. The former believe that America is—and always has been—“systemically racist” and that it is not worth celebrating and must be fundamentally transformed, largely through a centralized administrative state. The latter believe in America's history and heroes, its principles and promise, and in everyday Americans and the American way of life. They believe in the Constitution and republican government. Conservatives—the Americanists in this battle—must fight for the soul of America, which is very much at stake.

Success Stories

During his presidency, Donald Trump nominated three individuals to the Supreme Court: Neil Gorsuch, Brett Kavanaugh, and Amy Coney Barrett. These nominations were influenced by lists of potential candidates that were initially provided during his campaign and later updated during his presidency. These lists were compiled with the assistance of conservative organizations, including The Heritage Foundation and The Federalist Society.
